

Deadline Extended – Terms of Reference – International and National Experts on Electoral System Design

Ref. No. 2 from 18.02.2017

1. Background and context

Republic of Moldova is a constitutional democracy with its 1994 Constitution dividing power among the legislative, executive and judiciary bodies. The Moldovan Parliament has 101 members, elected for a four-year term in one nationwide constituency through a proportional representation system based on closed party-lists.

Citizens reaching 18 years of age on or before Election Day have the right to vote, apart from those who have been declared incapacitated or were deprived of the right by a court. Moldova implements a passive system of voters' registration. In 2014 the State Registry of Voters was implemented for the first time at the Parliamentary elections. According to this registry, in Moldova there are about 3,2 millions of voters. The average voter turnout at Parliamentary elections was 63%.

All type of elections is regulated by the Constitution, the Election Code, the Law on Political Parties, as well as Central Election Commission (CEC) regulations and decisions and relevant sections of the Criminal and Administrative Codes. The elections are administered by three levels of election administration: The Central Election Commission, District Electoral Councils (DECs) and approx. 2,000 Precinct Electoral Bureaus (PEBs). The election administration of different levels includes representatives of political parties proportional to their representation in Parliament. The current composition of CEC was appointed in 2016 for a five-year term, and consists of nine members, including two women – the Chairperson and Deputy Chairperson. One member is appointed by the President and the other eight members by Parliament, based on the composition of the 2014 Parliament. DECs consist of between 7 and 11 members who are nominated by the courts/local councils and parliamentary parties. PEBs consist of between 5 and 11 members who are nominated by local councils and parliamentary parties.

Overall, the legal framework provides an adequate basis for conducting democratic elections. However, the electoral system in Moldova has been an issue of discussion. The country has previously used both majoritarian and proportional electoral systems. In the first parliamentary elections of 1990, deputies of the National Assembly were elected by a majoritarian system through single-member constituencies. After the 1992 war in the Transnistrian region, this system became fully proportional in the parliamentary elections of 1994, with the entire country being considered one nationwide constituency. The proportional system has remained in place since 1994, but specific provisions have been adjusted. Since its adoption in 1997, the Electoral Code was amended more than fifty times. A reform in the Election Code of 2010 replaced the D'Hondt formula for mandate allocation with a new method which allocates "remainder seats" on an equal basis to all parties that pass the threshold rather than on a proportional basis.

In 2013, a reform of the electoral system was rapidly added to the agenda of the Parliament in the middle of a political crisis. The purpose of the draft amendments introduced in April 2013 was to alter the electoral system from a single nationwide constituency through proportional representation from closed party lists to a mixed member proportional system. Of the Moldovan Parliament's 101 MPs, 51 MPs were to be elected through a proportional system from party lists and 50 MPs through single-mandate constituencies.

In this context, the Venice Commission and OSCE/ODIHR stated that “the choice of an electoral system is the sovereign right of each state; however, it should be decided and agreed upon through broad and open discussions in the Parliament with the participation of all political forces”. Unfortunately, when the draft proposal was submitted for analysis, there had been no open debate with political parties or civil society representatives. ODIHR and Venice Commission commented on the proposed amendments and expressed a series of concerns with regard to the draft law. Following reaction from stakeholders, the law was repealed and the previous proportional system was restored.

In addition to repealing the amendments, in May 2013 the Parliament raised the thresholds for representation. Since then, the minimum thresholds for obtaining seats in Parliament are: for political parties to 6 per cent (increased from 4 per cent), for an electoral bloc of two political parties to 9 per cent (increased from 7 per cent); and for an electoral bloc of 3 or more political parties to 11 per cent (increased from 9 per cent). The threshold for an independent candidate remained at the level of 2 per cent (none of the independent candidates won a seat in the Parliament during the entire history of Moldovan elections).

A number of additional amendments to the electoral framework have been adopted in the Parliament during 2015-2016, including initiatives on introducing a gender quota for party lists and more comprehensive party and campaign finance regulations.

At the moment 45 political parties are registered in Moldova. The political environment in Moldova is severely polarized between the major political parties with tensions increasing every election. The divergences are even more deepened when it comes to discussions about the geopolitical orientation of the country, extensive corruption, the name of the language (Moldovan according to the Constitution but Romanian in fact), and other more recent phenomena like the theft of a billion US dollars from the banking system, allegedly supported by influential individuals closed to the political elites. A negative outcome of the elections is also the migration of the MPs between the faction/political parties in the Parliament after they got elected. Unfortunately, the lack of legal mechanisms to prevent this phenomenon is further eroding the trust of citizens in the electoral process and democratic institutions. These and other negative aspects of Moldovan politics led to a high level of distrust in political parties and main state institutions (Barometer of Public Opinion, October 2016). Thus, in Moldova 91% of people do not trust in political parties, 93% do not trust the Parliament, 90% do not trust the Government and 90% of people do not trust the justice system.

According to the Code of Good Practice and its explanatory report, the stability of the law is crucial to credibility of the electoral process, which is itself vital to consolidating democracy. This also applies to the electoral system, due to its decisive role in the election results. However, any electoral reform process should be subject to open debate and to expert opinions. Broad consensus is only possible when the public is well informed and all electoral stakeholders can express their opinion on the electoral changes under consideration. Inclusiveness and transparency are key aspects related to electoral reform and should be specifically ensured when modifying the electoral system.

Taking into account the previous evolution of the electoral system in Moldova, specifically the negative examples of sharp, non-transparent and non-inclusive changes of the electoral system, the negative social and political developments in the country but also the poor understanding by simple citizens of the Pros and Cons of the current and other electoral systems, on one side, and the recently invigorated discussions about an eventual change of the electoral system, on other side, Promo-LEX consider that broad public debates and consultation with political parties and civil society concerning an eventual reform should be guaranteed.

When public confidence in the electoral system is compromised, the entire democratic process suffers. It is for this reason that Promo-LEX is seeking two experts (one International and one National expert) to conduct a comprehensive study on the Pros and Cons of the electoral system in Moldova, the opportunity or necessity to change it, and if relevant, the best electoral systems to put in place in order to cope with the social-political developments and conflicts. Additionally, the experts will contribute to the design and implementation of an information and advocacy campaign focused on the topic of electoral system reform in Moldova.
